ELORA EXPRESS. THURSDAY JULY 3RD. 1884.

STORM DATE. SATURDAY JUNE 28TH.

A STREETSVILLE despatch of Saturday says: In the village today rain fell in torrents, but though the wind was high no damage was done. The full force of the tempest was felt about two miles west of here. The wind first blew from the north, but wheeled around to every point of the compass, devastating everything in its course. A public shed was torn down, killing a number of sheep in it at the time. The road for about two hundred yards was rendered impassable, being strewm with rails, not a fence being left after the storm had passed. Trees were broken off or uprooted. A man named RICHARDSON had a narrow escape. He sought shelter in a bush and stood behind a large oak tree which the wind uprooted. The falling trunk passed so close to his body as to hurt his arm.
