est employers' organization, agreed, saying the agency is "the only place where labor and management can get together and discuss their common interests."

The CCTMO has 10 members — five each from labor and management.

The agency slated to replace it would include members from other groups — including women's, consumers' and anti-poverty organizations.

As well, the new group's mandate would extend beyond the CCTMO's present advisory role on labor relations to include broader questions of employment and welfare policy.

'No expertise'

Dufour and Laberge said they have nothing against the creation of a board with representation from outside groups, but they believe such a board should be restricted to more general policy questions.

"I have nothing against women's groups or ethnic groups . . . being on advisory boards," Dufour, said "but as it stands, we're going to be forced to discuss labor-relations issues with people who have no expertise in the area at all."

André Messier, an assistant to Laberge, added that consensus within the new body will be more difficult to achieve with its expanded membership.

But Sylvie Marier, an aide to Quebec Labor Minister Pierre Paradis, disagreed, saying she doesn't see why it would be impossible for different groups to reach agreement.

6,000 homes lose power as winds rock three towns

S.O. May 28/1987

TROIS RIVIERES (Gazette-CP) — As many as 6,000 homes were without power for several hours yesterday but no one was injured when strong winds swept through three municipalities on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river, about 140 kilometres northeast of Montreal.

A spokesman for provincial police in the Trois Rivières region said the towns hit by the winds were Ste. Monique, St. Jean Baptiste de Nicolet and Port St. François.

Winds of up to 80 kilometres per hour were accompanied by heavy rain.

At the height of the storm, visibility was about two metres.

Hundreds of cars had to pull off the road to wait out the storm.

At least 15 hydro poles were broken and five roofs were ripped off barns and sheds, the police spokesman said.

He estimated damage at about $250,000.

The winds carried some roofs almost 100 metres.

Hydro-Quebec work crews expected to have power restored to most homes by morning.
