Mini-tornado blows roof off house

By Charles Bury

MAGOG TOWNSHIP — A family of seven was forced into the street in their pyjamas at the height of Tuesday's storm when a 'mini-tornado' ripped the roof off their house and literally blew it apart.

Maurice Langlois, his wife Nicole and five young children were enjoying a peaceful evening at home, the children supposedly safe in bed and the parents preparing for their evening bath, when a sudden gust of strong wind lifted the roof of their modest bungalow up, tearing it away from its moorings and dropping it back on several feet out of line with enough impact to send the floor crashing into the basement along with the occupants.

No one was seriously hurt in the incident, but the Langlois' had to crawl out of the remains, with only a cigaret lighter to show the way, before appearing dressed only in night clothes at their neighbors' home across Paul Street.

"It was about 8:30 last night," said Carole Lacroix, "and I was putting the kids to bed when they suddenly appeared in the doorway, wearing only their pyjamas. They were barefoot, and they were very upset. They were terrified."

"It was very windy," she said, "and we heard a roaring like the tornados you see on television. Then there was a cracking noise like when my husband lights the wood furnace in the basement. They came over right away."

The Langlois family had only lived on Paul Street for about two months, in a house they had moved there from another site. "There was no foundation, it was only sitting on some beams or something," said Lacroix. "Mr. Langlois said the roof rose up and then moved sideways, then it came down again and everything collapsed."

Langlois told the neighbors the house was beyond repair and would have to be torn the rest of the way down. In the meantime the family is staying with friends, and looking for another place to live — probably nowhere near Paul Street and the shadow of Mount Orford.

"This is a very windy spot," said Lacroix. "They say it's the wind from the mountain."

For the Lacroix family though, home is still home. "It takes a solid house to live here, and ours seems pretty solid," says Mrs. Lacroix. "We've been here two years and it didn't fall yet."
