"health" completely excised from the legislation, so that only the woman's life would be considered in the decision on whether to perform an abortion.

"In the light of that decision, this makes it even more important," Mr. Reimer said.

Mr. Boudria also saw an urgency in attempting to define fetal rights, now that the court had declared there were none in Quebec civil law or common law throughout Canada. He too said he would continue the fight for the amendments to get that definition in the current law.

People in the New Democratic Party were pleased that the court had sent a "strong signal" on the pro-choice side of the abortion debate. "It is not necessary to continue with abortion legislation. The legislation may not even stand up in court and certainly does nothing to prevent unwanted pregnancies," NDP women's issues critic Dawn Black said in prepared statement issued yesterday.

Meanwhile, the ruling also illustrated once again the wide chasm between the two sides of the abortion debate.

Pro-choice advocates saw the ruling yesterday as a vindication of their arguments about the supremacy of women's rights over fetal rights, and said it proved there was no need to put abortion back into the Criminal Code.

Bonnie Johnson, a director with the Canadian Abortion Rights Action League, also agreed with Mr. Kaplan about the clear signal that was being sent about third-party interventions. "Instead of limiting

Eastern tornados kill 7 U.S. schoolchildren and Quebec motorist

Reuter and CP

Seven children were killed when a tornado sent a wall of glass smashing into a cafeteria in a New York State elementary school yesterday.

In Richmond, Que., a man was killed when a series of tornados — part of the same storm system — crashed into the province.

The violent weather on the East Coast killed at least 26 people in two days.

Hospital officials said the seven children were killed and a dozen others injured when a 65-metre-wide twister slammed into a glass wall at the Coldenham Elementary School in Newburgh, N.Y., about 120 kilometres north of New York City.

In Richmond, 80 kilometres east of Montreal, a man was killed when his car was hit by a school bus full of children, Quebec provincial police official Bertrand Fortin said.

The victim's name has not been released.

Winds of more than 200 kilometres an hour blew the roof off a shopping mall in the centre of St-Hilaire, Que., a small community southeast of Montreal. The back wall of an office building behind the mall was demolished before the tornado continued down the main street — shattering windows and knocking down trees.

Roofs were torn off buildings, cars were overturned and mail boxes were thrown hundreds of metres, a St-Hilaire town official said.

"The tornado went through like a flash — maybe 30 seconds — but the winds kept up for over an hour," said Jeanine Lapalme, secretary to the Mayor. "Some of the overturned cars caught fire."

The high winds and heavy rains that lashed the province yesterday left almost 100,000 Hydro-Quebec customers without power for varying lengths of time in the Montreal area and in western Quebec, a utility spokesman said.

Four twisters struck New York and New Jersey yesterday, only a day after a tornado devastated the Alambama city of Huntsville, killing 17 people and injuring 463 others.

In Manhattan, police said a 70-year-old woman was killed when she was hit with debris blown from a roof.

There was tumultuous weather in much of the southeast, in the northeast and in southern Illinois as the winter's first wave of Arctic air hit the continental United States.

Winds of up to 110 kilometres an hour whipped the northeast, spawning four tornados, tearing off roofs and downing power lines.

Police in Nutley, N.J., said a tornado hit a highway in the town, damaging several cars and sending a truck careering across the road.

Aside from striking in several Alabama towns, storms caused scattered damage in Mississippi and injured 12 people when a tornado demolished a mobile home park in Coweta County, Ga., about 50 kilometres southwest of Atlanta's southern city limits.
